About Thomas H. Macbride

Thomas Huston Macbride served as the tenth president of the University of Iowa, from 1914 to 1916. Though he was president of the university for only two years, Macbride served the campus for more than a half-century as a scholar, professor, and administrator. Macbride Hall, one of the buildings on the Pentacrest, was constructed in 1904 as the Hall of Natural Science and was named in his honor in 1934.

During his tenure at the University of Iowa, Macbride joined a Greek organization known as Acacia Fraternity. His dedication to his fraternity was immense and he has become one of several remarkable alumni from this chapter. Other notable alumni include Albert Jessup (Jessup Hall), E.C. Mabie (Mabie Theater), and Everet Lindquist (Lindquist Center).

Mr. Macbride had a huge impact on this university until his passing in 1934. His legacy lives on through the students that are educated daily in his building and through the Thomas H. Macbride Leadership Scholarship which strives to reward students with the same passion for education and betterment that he held.

About ACACIA Fraternity
